Meet Your Bartlett Arborist Representative

Kevin Siragusa

Kevin is a Long Island native, who grew up and went to school in Plainview. His passion for the outdoors and the environment led him to attend SUNY College of Environmental Science and Forestry where he received his Bachelors of Science degree.

For the last several years, Kevin was employed in the Urban Forestry department of Cornell Cooperative Extension Nassau County. He worked on several Urban Forestry projects, including a US Forest Service Reforestation grant where he assisted in the coordination and planting of almost 1,700 trees in the communities devastated by the invasive Asian Long Horned Beetle. Kevin also worked on a DEC Urban Forestry Education grant, where he developed workshops, classes, and webinars on various topics. In addition, Kevin had a role as a community forester assisting Long Island municipalities and communities in their urban forestry management.

He looks forward to his new role as an Arborist Representative, helping clients to achieve tree and shrub care goals on their landscapes.
